

MIGRATION – MAMMALS

Why do these mammals migrate ANNUALLY? Pick the right answers from the list.

Hatch and rear their young	To hibernate in the winter	Feed and calve
Escaping from dangers	Maintain food & water supplies	Because they always have
To get work in the harvest	To escape the cold	To find a mate

Whales – make the longest annual migration journeys
Emperor Penguins
Wildebeest – and other animals on the African continent
Humans

Humans don't just migrate annually they often move from one town to another and one country or continent to another. This has been happening for a very long time.

Humans Prehistory - (To know what happens before written History we must use science to help us piece together the past)

The species of humans known as Homo-sapiens (that’s us) originated in East Africa over 200,000 years ago. Modern humans like us then spread across Europe and the world.

Our genetic makeup is dominated by its original source in East Africa and the vast mass of genetic code remains the same for all humans.

Activity - Why did prehistoric people decide to leave East Africa?

Work in a team

Cut up the cards

Organise the cards in a 'Diamond Format' to show which reasons are -

Homelands became unpleasant and they wanted something new and unknown	There were no jobs
Climate made places into huge ovens or freezers where barely anything can live or grow	Terrible political circumstances after an election
A natural disaster	Competition with hostile neighbouring groups
Food and other resources run too low to support the amount of people within an area	Their mobile food (herds of herbivores) migrated first and they followed
Better climates elsewhere	Greener lands elsewhere
Nomadic Lifestyle was normal	News skills and tools were invented
Inventiveness and cooperation gave time for some people to explore	Adventure and exploration – they were people who felt the need to take risks

Be prepared to present your ideas for what would be the most important reason to migrate in Prehistoric times.